The Street Photography Challenge

Tips, Tricks and Ideas to Reinvent Your Photography

David Gibson

- An accessible, fun and inspirational box of visual challenges, tips and prompts for keen and curious photographers
- From David Gibson, best-selling street photographer, writer and instructor
- Follow David's simple and inspirational ideas to begin taking your own masterpiece shots
- Includes a detailed booklet and 10 bonus tips from some of the legends of street photography, from Daido Moriyama to Joel Meyerowitz

Capture a reflection, play with layers, blatantly blur, or just try and 'shoot nothing'. The Street Photography Challenge is a boxed set of 50 cards, each giving keen photographers a simple prompt or idea for snapping great images in everyday environments. Flip the card over for an example image, and turn to the enclosed booklet when you need more detail. Also includes 10 bonus cards of inspirational quotes and key tips from some of the legends of street photography, from Daido Moriyama to Joel Meyerowitz. Forget about lenses, shutter speeds and apertures – just grab your camera or phone, pull a card, and get out there!

HOW TO USE THE CARDS

You might close your eyes and pick one or two of the cards out of the box before you hit the streets. Take an idea and see where it leads, adapting to what suits you. One of the hardest challenges of street photography is building up a signature style. Bruce Gilden's up-close, in-your-face images are sometimes quite brutal and may not be to everyone's taste, but they are consistently recognizable as the work of Bruce Gilden. As you experiment with the challenge, don't be afraid to inject your own personality. By the same token, don't be afraid to vary your approach, to build up a style and then look for ways to move forward.

'Working within the constraints of a single subject or technique can really bring out your creativity.'

If a card concept particularly resonates with you, try creating a series of works to more thoroughly explore it. Joel Meyerowitz did a whole workshop in New York based around the particular energy of street corners. What an innovative idea! Meyerowitz's gangster style is perfectly suited to the busy flow of people caught in the eddy of a street corner. It would be a challenge for me to attempt this subject, but maybe stepping away from my comfort zone would be enlightening. Sometimes working within the constraints of a single subject or technique can really bring out your creativity.

THE ART AND CHALLENGE OF STREET PHOTOGRAPHY

Street photography is real: it is not set up. It is ordinary life on the street, sometimes made extraordinary. It has attitude: it can be witty, dark, humorous, poignant, just plain odd and sometimes beautiful. Street photography is not an exact discipline: it strays into other territories, such as documentary, reportage and portraiture. It celebrates colour and light, often with timely constructed compositions, but it is also poetic, reflective and slightly abstract. Sometimes it features people, and sometimes it is about the absence of people, which can be equally as powerful. The work of the husband-and-wife team of Alex Webb and Rebecca Norris Webb expresses these nuances beautifully.

What camera you use does not really matter. A few years ago William Klein and Daido Moriyama, two giants of photography, had a big touring exhibition. Photographically, they are strange bedfellows, perhaps, but they are also kindred spirits, and this collaboration was not random. Both photographers over the years have used different cameras. While one might imagine Klein in his studio work using a formal, high-end camera, such as a Hasselblad, a documentary shows him in later years using a small, cheap digital camera on the street. Moriyama, never a studio photographer, currently uses a small Nikon G1R camera, which fits his frenetic, loose, informal style.

'The camera you use for street photography is of far less interest than what you do with it.'

I have long held the view that a camera close up to the eye is best, as an extension of the eye, but now that we have mobile phone cameras, such rigidity and style have become less certain. Magnum photographer Gueorgui Pinkhasov frequently uses his phone as a camera, taking both still shots and short videos, and the results are remarkable and inspiring. Ultimately, the make and model of the camera you use for street photography is of far less interest than what you do with it.

Dino Dash

A Jurassic Puzzle

Caroline Selmes

- Unique puzzle experience: Each piece takes the shape of an entire dinosaur, and no two shapes are alike! Plus they don't lock together like regular jigsaw pieces do for a whole new puzzling experience
- Other puzzles are in the shape of dinosaurs and dragons, but their pieces are regular jigsaw shapes. Not here!
- Series: The fourth in Laurence King's line of animal-themed cluster puzzles, and the first one for kids!
- Accurate yet playful illustrations: Caroline Selmes brings personality to these prehistoric creatures so that each piece is a delight: a puzzle you could even frame!
- High-quality: Dust-free pieces come in a sturdy gift box

There are 49 unique puzzle pieces, each in the shape of an entire dinosaur, clustered together along with an asteroid puzzle piece. Build the frame to hold the pieces together and then assemble the dinos into one big group. This is a cluster puzzle, so the pieces don't lock together the way traditional jigsaw pieces do. higher or lower prediction is wrong, put the first card into a new discard pile, leave the second card faceup, and play passes to the next player. The first player to make a complete monster line from 0-12 wins! If no player has completed a monster line when the cards in the middle run out, then the player with the most complete number line wins.

 MONSTER WAR
 Watch out, you are entering a battleground! These monsters are in the middle of a war and they need you to find out whose monster army will win. Deal all the cards out equally between players. Hold your cards facedown in one pile. The youngest player kicks off the fight by turning their uppermost card faceup to see which of their monsters will fight in the next monster battle, then all the other players do the same in turn. The person who turns over the biggest group of monsters (highest value card) wins that battle. The winner of the battle takes that group of cards and places them faceup in a separate pile, growing their monster army. Battles continue until all the cards have been played. Count up the cards in your faceup pile: whoever has the most cards has the biggest army and is the winner of the Monster War!

For a longer game, add any cards you win to the bottom of your facedown playing pile and keep going until one player has won all the monsters over to their side, becoming the ultimate winner of the Monster War!

MATHS SKILLS: comparing numbers

The monsters love to play together, but their favorite thing is to meet up with their best friends in matching groups. Will you help them find each other?

Deal out the cards equally between the players and hold your cards facedown in a pile. Take it in turns to turn one card faceup into a pile in the middle. Look out for monster matches, e.g. two 3s. When you spot a pair, shout 'monster match!' The first player to shout 'monster match!' and correctly count up all the monsters on those two cards (in this case 3 + 3 = 6) can take all the cards in the middle pile. Put the matched-up monsters aside in your points pile so they can play with their friends. If you get the total number of monsters wrong (you might be really rushing to get there first!), the cards stay on the table and play continues. (They will be swept up with the next pair; the next time someone shouts 'monster match!') Keep going until all the cards have been played. The player with the most cards in their points pile is the winner.

To take this game to the next level add up the value of all the monster matches in your points pile to calculate your monster bff points. In this version, it's the player with the highest monster count that wins—and that might not be the player with the most cards...

 MONSTER KINGDOMS
 The kings of the four monster kingdoms (not, crystal, hair, and fire) have announced a competition to choose their successors. Place the four monster kings (the 12s) in the centre of the table, shuffle the rest, and deal four cards to each player. Keep the remaining cards in a draw pile next to the
