

Babies can hear well, but not see clearly.

Waaa!

They cannot walk, or even crawl.

By the time they are two, most children can walk and talk.

I still can't drive, though.

Their brains grow really fast, too.

By the time children are seven, their brains are grown-up-sized...

If I have to eat a banana I will DIE!

...but they do not think like grown-ups.

When it is big enough, the larva chews a hole in the egg and wriggles out...

Noooo! Should have chewed a bigger hole.

... then it eats the rest of the egg...

... and the leaf the egg was stuck on.

Munch.

The larva eats so much, its skin gets too tight and it has to wriggle out.

That's better.

It will do this four more times.

After the fifth time, what emerges is not a bigger larva...

Hangs from branch.

I feel like a new me.

... it is a pupa.

I eat shrew poo!

Shadow play

Shower all the flames of light and shadow by making your own shadow puppet theatre – and adding to it as you like!

What story is to be made by light?

1. Gather your materials: a large cardboard box, lightweight white paper, dark card, balsa-wooden pegs, balsa-wooden sticks, a sheet of paper, a ruler, a scalpel or cutting knife and a strong thread or elastic string.

2. With no adults help, cut a square access window from the front of the box, then cut a slit in the top. Turn the light source on to the back. Use a string to tie up, or hold down, the top to get access to the puppets.

3. Make shadow puppets! The design will depend on the story you want to tell. Have an extra window display for figures, and set scenes. Use wood or paper to make the moving parts, with costume stringing on.

4. Make your own theatre, under an extension to use your play.

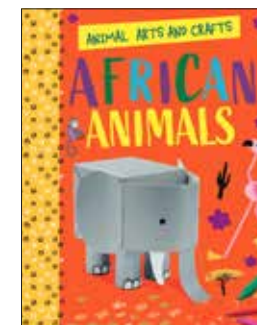

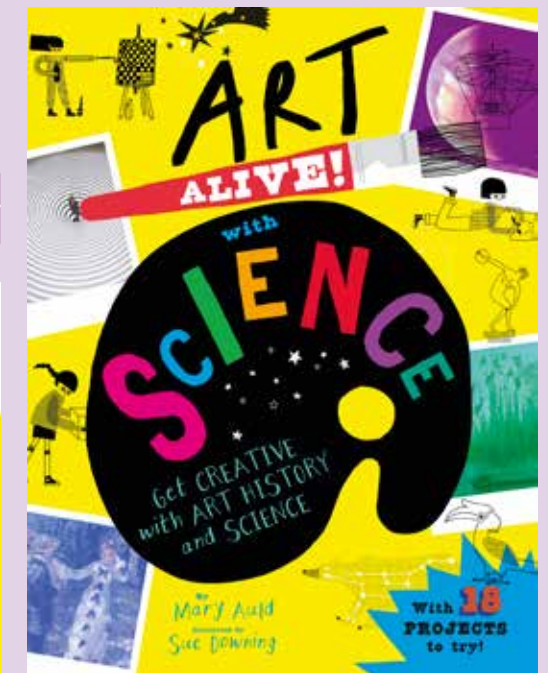

5. Light the stage to create real shadow theatre with varying lights.

6. Push holes in the outer body and the bracket parts at the point where they meet to join. Attach them together with the paper fasteners. Make something good really.

7. Tape a shadow to the back and make the moving parts good.

8. Angle your light source through the hole in the back of the box. Push the screen and up or use your shadow. Remove your play with a stick, help, experimenting with your lighting, and the shadow of your puppets to get the most dramatic shadow.

9. Make the stage to create real shadow theatre with varying lights.
