BELLA BRIGHT AND THE GHOST GAME

GHOSTLY GRAMMAR QUIZ AND SPOOKY CREATIVE WRITING

Extract from Bella Bright and the Ghost Game (pages 46-50)

A couple more twists and turns, and it was in front of us. We stood and looked at Darkling squatting on the side of the road, set far back from all the other houses. There was a preservation order on it because it was so old, and something to do with the tiny chapel ruins at the back. Around it, the other houses looked shiny and new. Darkling stood out like a monster's thumb on a human hand.

The sun was behind it now, like when I'd first seen the place. It shimmered behind the dark brick. The roof tiles seemed to bulge and shrink, like they were the huge scales of some enormous reptile. Maybe a dragon, I thought. Lex halted on the pavement and shaded her eyes with her hands. 'Woah,' she said. 'You live in the most crazy, scary house in the whole world.' I tried to put myself in her place, examining the details for the first time. Three floors topped with the strange clock tower. The small, dirty windows, with the ivy clambering up the front like it was trying to strangle the place. The chimney pots were wonky and several roof tiles had already given up the fight against gravity.

The shards crunched underfoot as we stepped closer.

Beside us ran the long, thin front lawns, tangled with spiky bushes and choking with weeds. 'Welcome,' I said in a fake-cheerful tone.

'Is there anybody there...?' called Lex as she leaned in, and her voice echoed in the hallway.

'Mum's out,' I said. 'It'll just be us.'

'Great,' said Lex doubtfully. We stared at each other before I clambered up the wonky step and entered the house. All around me it seemed hushed, like the house was holding its breath. Lex followed me closely, and then jumped as the door slammed.

I swallowed.

'I didn't touch it!' Lex exclaimed.
